

Conservation and Restoration of St Andrew's Church

The Story of the Building

The Anglican Church of St Andrew, Walkerville in South Australia, was one of the earliest churches built outside the parklands of Adelaide and was the first church to be built free of debt.

Since its consecration on 23 August 1848, the church has undergone three major additions, with the combined result that none of the original 1848 fabric now remains. Although different materials were used for each addition, the church's original Gothic revival style was maintained.

Adding to its early English Gothic appearance, St Andrew's Church has an outstanding collection of late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century stained-glass windows and a fine pipe organ.

What Needs to be Done

In 2006, St Andrew's Church was listed on the State Heritage List and a plan to restore the Church was formed. The restoration is taking place in two stages: Stage One - the organ (completed in 2008); Stage Two - the building.

A fund was established in partnership with the South Australian National Trust to appeal for funds. Thanks to a generous response from the public, Stage One was completed in 2008 with the restoration and rebuild of the organ.

However, the building and stained-glass windows are in urgent need of repair and without your help, the work cannot be completed.
